SATURN CONJUNCT NATAL SOUTH NODE

When the Natal South Node is in conjunction with Transiting Saturn this can be an extremely challenging time. The South Node has similar energies to Saturn, as it has to do with the past, creates challenging situations, and may force you to deal with things that are comfortable but that you have now outgrown and need to move beyond. It pushes you towards the new and unknown because it is also in Opposition with the North Node.

It is a time for restructuring and confronting old, outdated life ideals, situations and people that no longer serve a viable purpose in your life even though they bring comfort and a feeling of familiarity to you. Karmic obligations may now be in place, and you must rid yourself of anything that is outdated. There is a degree of responsibility to do what must be done, because it is your life and your path that must change towards an area which is unfamiliar and perhaps a little frightening.

Sometimes this can be a time when the past creeps up on us, and we must be realistic in our approach and deal with anything that might have been pushed under the proverbial rug. This may be belief structures especially if the ninth house is involved. It may be relationships, especially if the seventh house is involved. It might be the way you are raising your children or how you behave in romantic relationships if the fifth house is part of the picture.

The house position of the South Node in the natal chart, the house Transiting Saturn is moving through and the condition of both the nodes by aspects in the birth chart along with Saturn's natal position by aspect and house position are all areas that will assist in giving information so as to understand what transiting Saturn conjunct natal South Node will mean for you personally.

Transiting Saturn conjunct natal South Node is a significant period that pushes for revamping of old structures, your past and any intense responsibilities.